When we asked Jennie why she had chosen this role, here's what she said:

"Holidays are a real luxury and, in the current climate, we all need to be a little more selective about with whom we spend our pennies."

"There is a lot to be said for being loyal and I believe people need a good reason. Cruise Miles is a wonderful excuse to take more cruise holidays, and as a member I can really treat myself, knowing that next time I book I can take advantage of so many great benefits."

Since beginning her role as an Ambassador, Jennie has attended a number of our exclusive events, and enjoys meeting our clients who share her passion for travel.

Maritime Memories

with Nigel Lingard
(Non-Executive Director, Reader Offers Ltd)

OUR READER OFFERS
20TH ANNIVERSARY EVENTS
HAVE GIVEN ME A CHANCE TO MEET UP WITH SENIOR EXECUTIVES FROM MANY OF OUR PARTNER CRUISE
OPERATORS. AS WE DISCUSS
LONG-TERM PLANS, THERE IS ALWAYS A HINT OF THE KEEN COMPETITION BETWEEN THEM.

Although P&O's Britannia naming ceremony stole the new ship introduction limelight, Cruise & Maritime were not to be outdone. Their latest ship's Godmother, Gloria Hunniford, kept her tongue in cheek as she thanked Her Majesty The Queen for being a "warm-up act" to Magellan's naming! With both these ships being joined by Royal Caribbean's Anthem of the Seas this spring, lovers of cruises from UK ports are spoilt for choice.

Further down the line we see MSC returning to our shores with Splendida, one of their larger ships jam-packed with all the features of a floating holiday resort. To join her maiden season from the UK please see page 19.

Time was when ex-UK itineraries tended to follow a few standard routes, but the need for differentiation, plus demands from repeat customers, has led ship operators to create ever-more interesting holiday ideas. With modern vessels having so many on board entertainment and activity options, there is not the same pressing need to dash south to the sun - itineraries closer to home can be full of destination content; often with related themes and guest speaker programmes.

Venturing up estuaries, rivers and canals as far as size permits has become something of a trend lately, with overnight stays to enjoy city nightlife a regular feature. The French and Iberian rivers in particular lend themselves to wine themes, whilst further north breweries can offer alternative shore tours! To experience the rivers of Spain and France on board Fred. Olsen's Braemar please see page 7.

On one 1990s Olsen visit to Bordeaux, berthed on the fast-flowing Gironde river, a group of wine buffs came back with great memories from their tour. The vineyard's owners were away, and the stand-in hosts poured unlimited wine all afternoon - apparently the coach trip back featured much merry singing, and the ship's crew members were needed to assist some guests back up the gangway!

I'm sure that Swan Hellenic guests prefer to think of themselves as not the sing-along types, but Minerva's Rivers of France itinerary will prove quite a wine-lover's temptation I suspect! This pretty little ship is just back from refit, so she should be in fine shape this summer.

To round off this month, I can only say "cheers!"

ARCHER

Jane Archer is one of the UK's leading cruise journalists and the Daily Telegraph Travel's cruise expert. She has been sharing her experiences with Blue Horizons' readers for nine years.

PICTURE YOURSELF IN A BOAT ON A RIVER

The River Rhine - Cologne

Where can you go on a river cruise in Europe?

Just about anywhere - the Rhine in Amsterdam and Germany, the Danube through Austria, Slovakia, Croatia, Serbia, Bulgaria and Romania, the Rhône and Seine in France, wine cruises from Bordeaux and Douro in Portugal, as well as the rivers and lakes that connect Moscow and St. Petersburg in Russia.

Most months my column in Blue Horizons is devoted to news from the world of ocean cruising so for this special issue I have decided to let the rivers take centre stage.

Although river cruising has been around for decades, it's only in the past eight or nine years that it has come of age in the UK, not exactly rivalling oceans (how could it when the boats are so much smaller?) but certainly giving folk who love to cruise but have 'done' the Med, Baltic, Caribbean, etc, an alternative holiday on water.

The figures bear me out. In 2014, the number of British travellers taking a river cruise grew for the fourth year running - they were up 6% to a total 140,000, according to the UK and Ireland arm of the Cruise Lines International Association.

You can go on river cruises all over the world, from the Yangtze in China to the Amazon in Brazil and Peru and the Mekong in Cambodia and Vietnam, but Europe is the big hitter. Want to know why? Hopefully this Q&A, which focuses only on Europe, will encourage you to give it a go.

What's a river cruise boat like?

They can never be the same as an ocean-going ship because their width and height is limited by locks and bridges. Having said that, some new craft offered by the likes of APT and Uniworld have borrowed favourite features from ocean ships. The vessels might be smaller - think 100-200 passengers - but the most luxurious now have alternative dining venues, swimming pools, butlers, and cabins and suites with balconies.

And what about the river cruise itself?

Unlike ocean cruises, which include days at sea, on a river you're sailing through the heart of the country, seeing iconic villages, towns and cities that were built along the waterways as they were the only means of transport in the days before cars. Oh and you also see plenty of countryside, vineyards, gorges and castles. Most days you're ashore for a morning or afternoon and cruising the rest of the time, but expect to stay a day (sometimes overnight) in premier-league cities such as Vienna, Budapest and Paris.

What's included in the fare?

It varies but the likes of APT and Uniworld include so much in the cost of the cruise you really could leave your wallet at home. So as well as food and accommodation, they include excursions, alcoholic and soft drinks, gratuities and wifi.

To balcony or not to balcony?

Do you need a balcony on a river, where boats hold fewer people, have smaller cabins, a width restriction due to the locks and you get a one-sided view of the landscape? No, said European river cruise companies.

Then seven years ago a newcomer launched river cruise boats with balconies and now most new vessels have them.

On the newer Uniworld craft, they convert into sun lounges in deference to the European weather, which can be chilly in spring and autumn and on Christmas markets' cruises; APT uses AmaWaterways' vessels, which have split balconies - one half inside, the other half outside - so you have a private place to sit whatever the weather.

Many vessels alternatively have French balconies, with floor-to-ceiling windows that open to a rail so fresh air can come in but you can't get out. Cabins on the lowest deck have a high window with no view, which is not great as it's just wonderful to lie in bed and watch the world go by.

Any formal nights?

No. River cruising is very relaxed. Wear whatever is comfortable during the day and pack something smart for the evenings. Expect a captain's welcome and farewell at the beginning and end.

How about the entertainment?

Usually a resident pianist provides background music at teatime and after-dinner music in the lounge, usually on an electronic piano and anything from Elvis to the classics. Some evenings the cruise director will arrange for local groups of classical musicians, singers or dancers to come on, while during the day, there might be cooking demonstrations, wine or beer-tastings; I've even seen a glass-blower talk about his trade.

What is a typical itinerary?

Most river cruises sail from point A to B. There are numerous itineraries but the most popular itinerary is a 15 day journey through Europe, from Amsterdam to Budapest (or vice-versa), along the Rhine, Main, Main-Danube Canal and Danube. Add another few days and you can sail to the Black Sea. A one-week Amsterdam to Basle voyage (or vice-versa) on the Rhine, and sometimes including the smaller Moselle, is also a big seller. Uniworld has combi-cruises - a week each on the Seine and Garonne or Seine and Rhône.

What is there to do in port?

Mostly you'll be in port for a morning or afternoon, with a day or two in big cities such as Vienna and Budapest. At each stop, there'll be a guided tour of the town or city - included in the price with APT and Uniworld. Both also have alternative excursions at no extra cost for those who have been before. Of course, you are also free to do whatever you want. Just be sure to be back on board in time before your boat leaves!

Keep an eye out for our European river cruises in future issues of Blue Horizons!
