Solo so good

Jane Archer is one of the UK's leading cruise journalists and cruise expert for the Daily Telegraph. She has been sharing her experiences with Blue Horizons' readers for the past 14 years.

If only Roy Orbison had known. Instead of lamenting about being alone in his chart-topping hit Only the Lonely, he could have gone on a cruise and lo, his troubles would have been over. Because even if you cruise alone, you are never lonely thanks to the ready-made family of passengers and crew on board and guided tours ashore.

I was nervous the first time I cruised on my own – would anyone talk to me? – but within 24 hours I realised it's a great way to holiday alone. Not only did people talk to me, but I could do what I wanted – skip dinner, do the show, have a lie in – without having that “so what to do you want to do?” conversation with a companion.

I've no idea how many cruises I have taken on my own since then but I have never failed to make friends. True, there can be worrying moments, especially dinner time. I am not a fan of fixed dining, but it does cancel out having to impose yourself on other people. So does a good maitre d'.

One cruise line I sailed with had a brilliant maitre who seated me at a different table each night after introducing me to the other diners. It was the best of all worlds as it broke the ice and helped me meet lots of people.

Cruising alone used to mean having either a single inside cabin or paying a hefty supplement for a room with a view. Not any more. Lots of cruise lines now have a variety of cabin categories for solo travellers, mostly without supplements.

The first thing Fred Olsen did when it bought Bolette and Borealis in 2020 was to add single cabins – 37 and 45 respectively. Add that to the 64 on Balmoral and 41 on Braemar and you not only have lots of choice, but can take your pick of inside, oceanview or balcony cabins, and single suites.

P&O Cruises isn't doing badly in the singles stakes, with inside and oceanview solo cabins on all its ships. Britannia has the most (27), but new ships Iona and Arvia aren't far behind with 22 each, 12 of which have a balcony.

Kudos also to newcomer Ambassador Cruise Lines. Ambience doesn't have single cabins so instead 89 twin rooms are reserved for those sailing alone. Another vessel, Ambition, coming in 2023, will have 78 cabins set aside for solo travellers.

But the best is Saga Cruises, which has 109 single cabins and suites on new ships Spirit of Discovery and Spirit of Adventure. That's one fifth of their total room stock. There are no single supplements and they all have a balcony, which is terrific.

Just think. It's your private and peaceful outdoor space from which to see sunsets and watch the waves. Join Saga's Arctic Norway cruises next February and, solo or not, you'll have your own bit of real estate from which to look out for the Northern Lights.

There is a perception that only those who live alone cruise alone, but that's so wrong. I have met a lot of people (men and women) who cruise without their spouses, because the other half doesn't like to cruise or fly. My husband is happy in the Med and Caribbean, leaving me to do the exotic stuff alone.

And what amazing experiences I've had. I've been to the Demilitarized Zone in South Korea, climbed the Great Wall of China, walked through penguin rookeries in Antarctica and learned to cook India-style in Delhi on a post-cruise Golden Triangle tour in India.

I love India, a fabulous country full of colour and contrasts, so I have my eye on a fabulous Asia and India cruise-tour ROL has in 2024 pairing a cruise from Singapore to Mumbai on Celebrity Millennium with an eight-night tour of India visiting the Taj Mahal and Jaipur.

Celebrity Millennium doesn't have single cabins, but it does have AquaClass staterooms that come with exclusive access to Blu, a restaurant with healthy-style meals and tables for two within conversing distance of each other. I cruised Alaska solo in an AquaClass cabin with Celebrity and met different people at breakfast and dinner every day, which was brilliant. Conversations started with, "Are you on your own, you're brave" and then the chatter flowed. Don't believe me? Give it a go.
